Pondering With Deacon George:

“How often must I forgive?”

Today’s readings invite us to look honestly at one of the hardest and most necessary parts of Christian life: forgiveness. Sirach warns us that anger and resentment can take root in the heart and keep us from receiving the mercy we ask from God. The psalm reminds us that the Lord is kind and merciful, slow to anger, and rich in compassion. Saint Paul tells us that whether we live or die, we belong to the Lord. And in the Gospel, Jesus teaches Peter – and all of us – that forgiveness cannot be measured by counting how many times we have forgiven. It must flow from the mercy we ourselves have received.

Peter asks Jesus, “How often must I forgive?” He thinks seven times is generous. But Jesus responds, “Not seven times, but seventy-seven times.” In other words, forgiveness is not a matter of keeping score. The Christian heart is not called to calculate mercy, but to imitate the mercy of God. This does not mean pretending that hurt did not happen, nor does it mean allowing injustice to continue. Rather, forgiveness means refusing to let bitterness rule our hearts. It means placing our wounds before God and asking for the grace to be free.

The parable of the unforgiving servant shows the great difference between God’s mercy toward us and the mercy we sometimes struggle to show others. The servant is forgiven an enormous debt, something he could never repay. Yet he refuses to forgive a fellow servant who owes him far less. Jesus uses this image to remind us that every one of us stands before God as a debtor who has been forgiven. If God has been so generous with us, how can we refuse mercy to others?

Forgiveness is not always easy. Sometimes the wound is deep, and healing takes time. But the first step is to desire what God desires: peace, reconciliation, and freedom from resentment. We can begin by praying for the person who hurt us, asking God to soften our hearts, and choosing not to repay hurt with hurt. Forgiveness may begin quietly, in the hidden places of the heart, long before words are spoken.

This Sunday, Jesus invites us to remember how much we have been forgiven. When we truly understand God’s mercy, we become more merciful. When we let go of resentment, we make room for grace. And when we forgive from the heart, we reflect the love of the Father who never stops forgiving us.

May we always strive to live as a witness of God’s mercy,
Deacon George
